Hairy Facts

What type of hair do you have on your head? Thick? Thin? Straight? Curly? Hair can be coloured red, brown, black or blonde. Your hair type and colour are inherited from your parents and your grandparents and so on. So if your parents have curly red hair, there is a chance that you may too.

Hair raising

Hair begins to grow under the skin's surface, starting at the root. Each hair pushes through a tiny opening called a follicle. If the follicles are round, the hair will be straight and if they are oval, the hair will be curly.

The hair on your head grows about 12 to 15 cm per year. This means that a strand of hair could be between two and seven years old.

Hair, hair everywhere

Humans have hair in most places on their bodies, including the head and face. Body hair is very fine and can be hard to see. There are parts of the body that don't have any hair at all, such as the lips, the soles of the feet and the palms of the hands.

Hair has a number of jobs. The hair on your head keeps you warm and protects you from the sun. Eyebrows and eyelashes stop sweat, dirt and rain from going into your eyes while other body hair also helps to keep you warm.

Did you know?

The hair that you can see is actually dead! The hair that grows under the skin is alive but when it pushes out of the skin's surface, it is no longer living. That's why it doesn't hurt when you get it cut! It's just like cutting your fingernails.

the sleepover

'You're sure you have everything you need?' asked Kitty's mum.

'Yep,' said Kitty, patting her bursting backpack and ringing the doorbell.

From inside the house there was a squeal followed by a stampede of footsteps towards the door. It flew open and out rushed Lauren followed closely by her twin brothers and the dog. She threw herself into a bear hug with Kitty, jumping up and down the whole time.

'Okay, I'll see you in the morning,' Kitty's mum said as she kissed her daughter goodbye. 'Make sure you get some sleep!'

'Did you remember your torch, Kitty?' asked Lauren breathlessly.

'Yes,' said Kitty. They waved a hasty goodbye to Kitty's mum and went inside.

The best friends had been planning the perfect sleepover for weeks. There was so much to do! They would play with Lauren's pet rabbit, then walk her dog Barker in the park. They might do some singing and practise their dancing. Maybe they would do some drawing and make comic books. There was going to be pizza and apple pie for dinner. Then they'd watch a movie and have hot chocolates with marshmallows. They would sleep in the garden in a tent. They would explore the garden with torches to see if they could spot a possum or a bat or an owl. They would scare each other with spooky stories and stay awake until midnight, or maybe even until morning. Then there would be pancakes, of course, for breakfast. It was definitely going to be the best sleepover ever!

When Kitty's mum arrived the next morning, the girls were chatting away over their pancakes.

'It sounds like they're planning the next sleepover already! Did they stay up late?' whispered Kitty's mum to Lauren's.

'They didn't even make it to the end of the movie, let alone to the tent!' said Lauren's mum. 'They were both fast asleep in front of the TV by 8 o'clock! We've had a very quiet night.'

6. Why was Kitty 'patting her bursting backpack'?

7. The word 'stampede' shows that Lauren and her brothers
- (A) were marching.
 - (B) skipped side by side.

8. Why was Lauren talking to Kitty 'breathlessly'?
- (A) She was frightened of the dark.
 - (B) She was excited about the sleepover.
 - (C) She was whispering so her mum wouldn't hear.
 - (D) She was tired from playing with her brothers and the dog.
9. 'The best friends had been planning the perfect sleepover for weeks. There was so much to do!'
- What is the best way to combine these two sentences without changing their meaning?
- (A) The best friends had been planning the perfect sleepover for weeks and there was so much to do!
 - (B) The best friends had been planning the perfect sleepover for weeks then there was so much to do!
 - (C) The best friends had been planning the perfect sleepover for weeks when there was so much to do!

Book Reviews

Noah Dreary

Aaron Blabey

'One day, Noah Dreary complained so much that his head fell off.'

With a great opening line like this, how could you resist turning to the next page?

It seems that nothing pleases Noah Dreary. He complains about everything, from one tiny cloud in the sky to the lack of added sugar in his breakfast cereal. No wonder his head falls off and bounces on the living room rug! His mum rushes him to hospital, but nothing can be done. This makes Noah complain even more. Then one fateful day the wind blows his head down a grassy hill and into the ocean. This changes everything.

You'll be pleased to know that there is a happy ending. It's such a laugh-out-loud book with hilarious, oversize illustrations. But there's a hint of a moral: Noah learns to make the most of what he has and be happy.

The Bad Guys: Episode 1

Aaron Blabey

Everyone knows that wolves, sharks, snakes and piranhas are bad, right? You only have to look at all those teeth to know that. When these four creatures form a gang, we can expect mayhem. Who knows what terrible things they'll get up to? But not the four creatures in this book. Mr Wolf has decided he wants to be a good guy and he convinces the others to give it a go. Breaking the stereotype is not as easy as you would think. It's probably something to do with all those teeth. However, the guys persevere and in the end ... well, you'll see.

Although this story is suitable for younger readers, its appeal isn't limited to just the 8-year-old age group. It's always good to see bullies make the effort to change their behaviour. It's a lighthearted, humorous look at an important issue. Hopefully, while readers are laughing at the artwork and the funny dialogue, they'll also be learning a really important lesson without realising it.

Dear Diary

Thursday 22 June

I can hardly write about the dreadfulness of it all. You know the story so far, Diary: weeks spent planning my billycart, just a couple of days building it, and only a few hours last night painting it, ready for the big race. Yes, I realise that 'dreadfulness' is an unhappy sounding word, but it describes today's events perfectly.

At 9 am exactly we lined up at the starting point on George Street. Mrs Digby waved her chequered flag around as if her life depended on it, and we took off. Thirty-two homemade bilycarts tore down the hill. I was in front. I was smug. Have you heard the expression 'Pride comes before a fall'? In my case it wasn't so much a fall, as a head-on collision with the hay bale barrier at the end of George Street.

I've drawn the racetrack on the map. See that sharp right-hand bend into Queen Street? I've circled it on the map. Well, Diary, I missed it completely. Sailed straight ahead into the hay bales, didn't I? And why, you ask, did I miss the turn? Well, for that explanation we need to return to the plans. It seems that I made an error with the steering mechanism: it didn't steer! In my effort to make sure that the cart held together, I had over-tightened the bolt holding the front axle (I've marked it with an arrow on the picture). I know what you're thinking, Diary. I agree that a test run would've indicated the problem, but I'd hardly had time to put the wheels on, let alone have a test run.

So, there I was. Me, the cart and the hay bales. I sat among the mess and watched 31 fully-functioning carts successfully turn the corner. Sally Harris, who is supposed to be my best friend, even had the nerve to wave and smile at me as she went past. Here's a new word for you, Diary, since you don't like 'dreadfulness': chagrin. It means disappointment or humiliation.

STOPPING PIRATE GREED

Captain Tom gripped the starboard beam and assessed the choppy grey seas. The waves lapped against the side of the ship causing icy water to spray on his face. Something lurked in the distance. He squinted through the binoculars.

'First Mate Molly, I think you'd better come here quickly,' he called over his shoulder. First Mate Molly arrived by Tom's side.

'Hmmm,' she said with an anxious look. 'Pirate Greed is back. We'd better hide the loot.'

'Indeed,' agreed Captain Tom. 'Quickly!'

First Mate Molly leapt along the deck to where the loot was resting inside a barrel. 'I'm going to take it below deck,' she advised.

'There's no time. Look!' Captain Tom pointed at the intruder who was climbing the bow of the ship. The pirate's grimy fingers clawed up the wood. When he threw a leg over the beam, Tom squealed. He took a breath. This was no time to be afraid; he was the captain after all.

'Back off, Pirate Greed,' he ordered. Pirate Greed ignored Captain Tom and then threw his other leg on the beam.

'I've got this,' said First Mate Molly, drawing her sword.

Pirate Greed jumped to his feet. 'Give me the loot and no one gets hurt.'

'Never!' replied Captain Tom. 'We worked hard to steal that loot. We're not going to hand it over to you.'

Pirate Greed advanced towards the barrel. He must be able to smell it, thought Captain Tom. They had to stop him. Looking around he noticed First Mate Molly's sword was glowing in the sun.

'Ah ha!' he hurried towards First Mate Molly and tilted her sword at an angle so that the sunlight bounced off the metal and towards Pirate Greed. The bright light flashed in Pirate Greed's eyes and he stumbled backwards, falling on the deck with a thump. First Mate Molly tied his wrists with ropes.

'Well done, First Mate Molly!' said Tom to his sister as he reached for the biscuits in the barrel. 'Do you think we should untie Dad now?'

'After we eat the loot,' she smiled.

The First Lighthouse

It was in ancient Egypt, around 2300 years ago, that the great Pharaoh Ptolemy I Soter ordered plans to be drawn up for what was to be the world's first lighthouse. It was to be built on the island of Pharos, one-and-a-half kilometres off the coast of the city of Alexandria. The purpose of the Lighthouse of Pharos, as it became known, was to protect ships coming into the dangerous waters of the Alexandria harbour. Standing more than 110 metres high and built out of white marble, the Lighthouse of Pharos was so impressive that it became one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World.

In those days, as nearly the tallest building around, it must have had the best views in the world! (The pyramids at Giza were taller, but it was forbidden to climb them—as it still is now.)

The design of the lighthouse was very different to those we see today; it was built in three stages. The bottom level was over 60 metres high and more than 30 metres square. It looked like a huge box. On top of the box was an octagonal tower about 27 metres high with each of its eight sides more than 18 metres wide. And on top of the tower was a cylinder over seven metres high. During the day, the sun reflected off mirrors made of highly-polished bronze and at night, the lighthouse was lit by fires. It was said that the light from the Lighthouse of Pharos could be seen for more than 56 kilometres out to sea.

Incredibly, almost 700 years after it collapsed in an earthquake, the fame of the Lighthouse of Pharos lives on. In October 1994, Frenchman Dr Jean-Yves Empereur was asked by the Egyptian Supreme Council of Antiquities to investigate an area beneath the sea, just outside Alexandria's eastern harbour. In 1995 he took a team of divers, topographers, Egyptologists and photographers with him and started to mark, chart and illustrate approximately 1000 archaeological artefacts found on the bottom of the sea.

The Lighthouse of Pharos on coins minted in Alexandria in the second century.

Apart from locating enormous blocks of stone and fragments from columns, the excavators also found sphinxes, parts of obelisks and inscribed blocks, all of which the excavators believed most likely belonged to the Lighthouse of Pharos. Even more exciting was the discovery that some of these building materials were much older than the Lighthouse of Pharos.

The Egyptian authorities are planning to build a modern version of the lighthouse on the very same spot at Pharos. This lighthouse will be made of concrete with glass walls and will be 145 metres high. The walls will reflect the sun by day and a beacon will cast its light at night.
