

CATS

on a tin roof

High up on a chimney, poking out of a tin roof, high up amongst the clouds and above the noise of the city, sat the two tabby cats. They were well-fed cats, with thick fur, calm faces and wide paws. All morning they sat on the roof either on or by the chimney, observant, mysterious. Then around lunchtime they scampered off and disappeared from sight, until the next morning when they would be on the roof again.

'They MUST belong to someone,' said Angela to Mr Northing. 'Someone must feed them. And where do they go?'

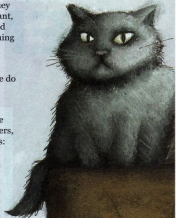

They were discussing the cats, as usual, inside the dark little corner store where all the residents of the building bought their milk and bread and newspapers, or tins of things. Mr Northing's shop was full of tins: tins of soup, tins of fruit and tins of cat food.

'Cats are like ghosts,' he said. 'They come and go as they please.'

'I suppose I just worry about them,' said Angela. She paid her money quickly and left.

But it wasn't really true, Angela thought as she stepped outside the dingy airless comfort of Mr Northing's shop. She didn't worry about the cats. The cats worried her. She felt as though they were watching her, noticing everything she did, judging her.

'They don't like me,' she thought, and she knew it to be true, however ridiculous it might sound if the words were spoken aloud. Those two fat whiskered cats most definitely didn't like her.

1. What did the cats do when they were on the roof?
 - (A) They chased one another.
 - (B) They leapt from roof to roof.
 - (C) They scratched the chimneys.
 - (D) They sat and looked at people.

2. The word 'MUST' is written in capital letters because
 - (A) Angela stressed the word.
 - (B) Angela was angry with Mr Northing.
 - (C) Angela was feeling sorry for the cats.
 - (D) Angela disagreed with Mr Northing's answer.

3. In his conversation with Angela, what did Mr Northing say about the cats?
 - (A) The cats looked scary.
 - (B) The cats went wherever they wanted.
 - (C) The cats had an owner who spoilt them.
 - (D) The cats lazed around all day in the sun.

4. Which phrase best describes Mr Northing's shop?
 - (A) clean and tidy
 - (B) light and bright
 - (C) small and cramped
 - (D) quiet and comfortable

5. Angela was worried because
 - (A) she thought that the cats might fall.
 - (B) she thought that the cats were lonely.
 - (C) she wondered if the cats were hungry.
 - (D) she felt that the cats were watching her.

6. The word 'ridiculous' means
 - (A) rude.
 - (B) brave.
 - (C) foolish.
 - (D) different.

Fireworks

Fireworks began with a bang when gunpowder was invented. The Chinese were the first to discover that mixing certain metals and fuels together caused an explosion. Gunpowder is a mixture of potassium nitrate, sulphur and charcoal.

A thousand years later, the Chinese filled bamboo tubes with gunpowder and threw them into fires during religious festivals. The sparks and explosions were supposed to scare away evil spirits. On Chinese New Year, thousands of little red firecrackers are let off.

In the 13th century, the explorer Marco Polo brought Chinese gunpowder to Europe. It was used to fire cannonballs, and then guns.

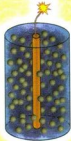

Today, the really big fireworks displays are generated with computers. Instead of lighting fireworks by hand, a computer program tells you how high up the firework will explode, how long it will stay in the air, and what colours it will be. The computer can even set the fireworks to explode in time to music!

Star Light

Fireworks contain a mixture of chemicals that burn well. They are made of:

- fuel (to keep the firework burning)
- an oxidiser (to make the firework easy to light)
- a binder (to keep everything in place)
- chemicals (to colour the firework, such as copper for green or sodium for yellow).

When these ingredients are mixed together, they form a ball the size of a pea. This ball is called a star. Hundreds of these stars are bunched into a container, and gunpowder is sprinkled between the stars to make the container explode. The container is then launched from a metal pipe. It has a fuse that helps it to explode when it is high in the air.

7. The words 'Fireworks began with a bang' can be read in two different ways. One way refers to the sound that fireworks make. The other way refers to
- (A) the similar sound that guns make.
 - (B) the excitement of a fireworks display.
 - (C) the fear that people have of fireworks.
 - (D) the various methods of making fireworks.
8. Why do the Chinese let off firecrackers on special occasions?
- (A) to drive evil spirits away
 - (B) to frighten their enemies
 - (C) to remember the Chinese New Year
 - (D) to signal the start of the celebrations
9. In the 13th century the Europeans used gunpowder to
- (A) power their ships.
 - (B) fire their weapons.
 - (C) make colourful fireworks.
 - (D) celebrate religious festivals.
10. What is the main idea of the fourth paragraph?
- (A) Music is the latest addition to fireworks displays.
 - (B) Fireworks are now made completely by machines.
 - (C) Chemicals are used to make the colours of fireworks.
 - (D) Modern fireworks displays are programmed on computers.
11. What is the purpose of a binder?
- (A) It allows the firework to be lit quickly and easily.
 - (B) It creates energy to keep the firework burning longer.
 - (C) It makes the colour of the firework appear much brighter.
 - (D) It helps to keep all the chemicals in the firework together.
12. Some words in the text are written in bold font because
- (A) they are labels for a diagram.
 - (B) they are written by a scientist.
 - (C) they highlight important information in a list.
 - (D) they show the order for adding the ingredients.

Would I lie to you?

Have you ever said that the dog ate your homework? Or told your mum you've eaten your broccoli, when really you've hidden it in your napkin so you could flush it down the toilet? Everyone lies. From harmless white lies to lies about serious things, lies are a natural part of human behaviour. So why do we do it? What happens when we lie? And how can you tell if someone is lying?

Born to lie

We aren't the only ones that lie—some animals can't help it. Stick insects, butterflies and snakes all disguise themselves to trap food or escape predators, but these are tricks of nature. Scientists think chimpanzees might also be able to lie, but so far the only species we definitely know of that lies is humans.

A real lie means you have to be able to guess what someone else is thinking. So when your dad asks you if you were the one who broke the antique vase in the living room, you'd have to guess that he's seen the broken vase and, even though you don't know for sure whether he actually saw you break it, that you're suspect number one. Then you'd guess that he's going to punish you for it, in which case you might say, 'Uh uh. Wasn't me. Must have been the cat.'

The truth behind the lie

Do you get nervous when you tell a lie—not just a little white lie, but a big fat serious lie? Lying causes different physical changes in different people, but everyone is affected in one way or another. Some people get sweaty; others go pale. Some tap their feet or look at the ground. Although lying can help us escape danger, it also increases the chance of punishment if we are caught, so telling a serious lie puts our mind under a lot of stress. Our bodies get ready to make a run for it: we get sweaty palms, our heart rate and blood pressure increase, and we start breathing heavily.

13. What is the purpose of the first two questions in the text?
- (A) to suggest that children's lies are harmless
 - (B) to allow the writer to provide the answers later
 - (C) to interest the reader by referring to familiar situations
 - (D) to remind readers of some questions they have heard before

14. The main idea in the second paragraph is that
- (A) all living things have the ability to lie.
 - (B) lies are a form of disguise for animals.
 - (C) scientists have proved that chimpanzees tell lies.
 - (D) humans are the only creatures that are known to lie deliberately.
15. The main reason that the writer includes a story about breaking a vase is to
- (A) show that children tell many lies.
 - (B) give an example of a typical situation.
 - (C) explain what motivates some people to lie.
 - (D) prove that adults blame children for accidents.
16. The information under the picture is a
- (A) label. (B) caption. (C) diagram. (D) heading.
17. Why has the picture been included in the text?
- (A) to illustrate a physical reaction caused by lying
 - (B) to summarise the arguments used by the writer
 - (C) to give hints about how to lie without being caught
 - (D) to explain how people feel when they are told a lie

The Snowman

Nick and Gina were happy that the first snow of winter had fallen at last. Although it wasn't a heavy fall (18) the ground wasn't totally covered, there was enough snow to build a snowman. Quickly (19) putting on warm jackets, woollen gloves and knitted scarves.

The children rolled snow into a large ball and then added extra snow until they felt the ball was big enough to look like a body. They rolled (20) smaller ball that was then stuck on top as the snowman's head.

The figure wasn't pure white because the snow wasn't very deep and bits of grass and leaves stuck out of it. (21) it was a snowman.

The Shadow in the Bay

The cry so startled Seb that for a moment he held his breath, and when the wailing again swept across the water, he took a great gulp of air and felt he had swallowed the storm.

He scanned the reef, and there it was, the moving blue, the swaying grey shadow perched mysteriously at the end of the rock bridge. Could it be waiting for him to answer?

He put the recorder to his lips and played six notes as loudly as he could. He paused and immediately there came a reply—one long piercing note that seemed to ride the waves to shore. He played again, the creature keened once more, and then it was a game of call and answer, call and answer, as he walked toward the reef.

The shallow pool guarding the bridge of rock was deeper today. He waded through it, feeling the cool wind against his legs as he climbed onto rock on the other side. The creature was still there, still waiting.

People will take risks, put themselves in danger when they are very determined. Fishermen have been swept off rocks and drowned trying to rescue a tangled line or haul in a great fish. Seb was determined. In spite of the gathering storm and his own fear, in spite of the waves that tumbled and crashed against the rock bridge, he was going to find out, once and for all, what this creature was.

The further he walked onto the reef, the more the moving blur took shape—a smooth, solid, fishlike shape. Now the rock bridge sloped toward the water and low waves foamed and spilled around Seb's feet. But there was no time for caution; he was only four or five metres away now and he could see the dolphin quite clearly—or the part of it that protruded from the water, sleek and grey and gleaming.

He stopped walking and crouched down, and as he did, the dolphin's beak opened and its high-pitched cry filled the air. It was so loud this time that Seb automatically reached to cover his ears, and at the sudden movement the creature wriggled violently, the water around it foamed and in an instant it had disappeared into the sea.

22. What made the 'wailing' sound that swept across the water?
- (A) the dolphin
(B) the storm
(C) the recorder
(D) the boy
23. In the question, 'Could it be waiting for him to answer?', the word 'it' refers to
- (A) the reef.
(B) the shadow.
(C) the bridge.
(D) the storm.
24. What can the reader tell from the words, 'The shallow pool ... was deeper today'?
- (A) Seb knew that the bridge of rock was dangerous.
(B) The storm had damaged the bridge of rock.
(C) The pool was too deep to cross on this day.
(D) Seb had visited this part of the bay before.
25. By comparing Seb to fishermen, the writer is suggesting that Seb is
- (A) trying to rescue the creature.
(B) afraid of the approaching storm.
(C) putting himself in danger.
(D) preparing to haul in a great fish.
26. Which word from the passage is opposite in meaning to 'muted'?
- (A) 'swaying'
(B) 'perched'
(C) 'piercing'
(D) 'tangled'
27. The dolphin disappeared into the sea because it was
- (A) happy now that it had seen Seb.
(B) frightened away by what Seb did.
(C) bored with the game it was playing.
(D) worried that more people might come.
28. Why did Seb play some notes on his recorder?
- (A) to establish a link with the creature
(B) to imitate the sound the creature made
(C) to encourage the creature to come to him
(D) to comfort the creature which was stranded

Mummy Mania

Mummies can grip the public imagination. Film studios have cast them as heroes and villains (the first mummy movie, made in France, came out in 1909), countless books have been written about them, and artists have been inspired by their odd looks. (The Scream, painted by Norwegian artist Edvard Munch, is based on a mummy's facial expression.) And there are many stories about curses and strange goings-on.

'Death comes on wings to he who enters ...

... the tomb of a pharaoh.' Who says so? In 1923, an English novelist, Marie Corelli, wrote to The Times newspaper, London, claiming this was an ancient curse (in fact, she had made it up). The tomb of the pharaoh Tutankhamun had recently been found, and Corelli predicted death for all those who entered it. When a mosquito bite led to the death of Lord Carnarvon, the excavation sponsor, it was taken as proof of the curse coming true. Some people still believe in the idea of a 'mummy's curse', even today.

The mummy as an 'urban myth'

It was a cursed mummy that caused the ship Titanic to collide with an iceberg and sink in 1912 on its first voyage. True or false? False, of course! However, some people have actually fallen for this urban myth (a story that sounds as if it has some truth in it, but has not).

These are the facts behind the strange case of the so-called Unlucky Mummy. The British Museum, London, has an ancient Egyptian coffin lid in its collection, but not the mummy of the woman it once covered. In the early 1900s, William Stead, an English journalist, and Thomas Murray, an amateur Egyptologist, became interested in the lid, which was said to be unlucky (bad luck was supposed to happen to anyone connected with it).

Stead wrote about the coffin lid and its powers. Later, Stead died on the Titanic (bad luck indeed). Survivors said he had entertained passengers with his Unlucky Mummy story. As happens with stories, new bits were added as it was told again and again, and so Stead's story took on a life of its own. It was said the British Museum had wanted to rid itself of a cursed mummy (this sounded more exciting than saying a 'coffin lid'). They sold the make-believe mummy to an American, who shipped it across the Atlantic on—you guessed it—the Titanic. The truth is the lid never went anywhere. It is on display today in the British Museum, just as it has been since 1890.

It was this decorated coffin lid in the British Museum that became mixed up with the urban myth about the existence of a mummy on board the ill-fated liner Titanic. Despite attempts to tell the truth, the story still crops up, and people still fall for the joke. Or perhaps they are the sort of people who want to believe it is true, no matter what you tell them.

29. The words 'Death comes on wings' are a reference to
- (A) a title of a novel.
 - (B) the pharaoh's tomb.
 - (C) a newspaper article.
 - (D) the mummy's curse.
30. Which words in the second paragraph indicate that the information which follows is true?
- (A) 'claiming this'
 - (B) 'in fact'
 - (C) 'taken as proof'
 - (D) 'still believe'
31. According to the text, which of the following does the British Museum hold in its collection?
- (A) the Unlucky Mummy
 - (B) part of the ship Titanic
 - (C) a female Egyptian mummy
 - (D) an ancient Egyptian coffin lid
32. The expression 'Stead's story took on a life of its own' means that
- (A) Stead's notes were rewritten as a story.
 - (B) Stead was wrongly given credit for the story.
 - (C) others took up Stead's story and added to it.
 - (D) people found Stead's story impossible to believe.
33. Some information in the text has been placed in brackets. Which quotation is a definition?
- (A) 'the first mummy movie, made in France, came out in 1909'
 - (B) 'a story that sounds as if it has some truth in it, but has not'
 - (C) 'bad luck was supposed to happen to anyone connected with it'
 - (D) 'this sounded more exciting than saying a "coffin lid"'

Kensuke

There fell between us a long and aching silence. Kensuke never once reproached me for what I had done. He was not angry or sullen at me. But I knew I had hurt him to the soul. It wasn't that we didn't speak—we did—but we no longer talked to one another as we had before. We lived each of us in our separate cocoons, quite civil, always polite, but not together any more. He had closed in on himself and wrapped himself in his thoughts. The warmth had gone from his eyes, the laughter in the cave house was silenced. He never said so—he did not need to—but I knew that now he would prefer to paint alone, to fish alone, to be alone.

So, day after day, I wandered the island with Stella, hoping when I returned that he might have forgiven me, that we could be friends again. But always he kept that distance between us. I grieved for my lost friendship. I remember I went often now to the other end of the island, to Watch Hill, and sat there and sat there, no longer looking out for ships, but rehearsing aloud my explanation. But no matter how much I rehearsed it, how I reasoned it, I could never convince even myself that what I had done was anything other than treachery. In the end, as it turned out, it was Kensuke who explained it to me.

We had just gone to bed one night when Tomodachi came to the mouth of the cave and squatted there. She had done this once or twice lately, stayed for just a few minutes, peered in at us and gone off again. Kensuke spoke up in the darkness. 'She lose Kikanbo again,' he said. 'She always lose her baby. Kikanbo very wicked baby. He run off a lot. He make Tomodachi very sad mother.' He clapped his hands at her, shooing her away. 'Kikanbo not here, Tomodachi. Not here.' But Tomodachi stayed, I think for comfort more than anything else. I had noticed before with the orang-utans, how they would often come to Kensuke when they were upset or frightened, just to be near him. After a while Tomodachi slunk off into the night and left us alone again, with the din of the forest and the silence between us.

36. What appears to have happened between Kensuke and the narrator before this text begins?
- (A) Kensuke has chosen to be silent.
 - (B) The narrator has found a new friend.
 - (C) Kensuke has decided to leave the cave.
 - (D) The narrator has hurt Kensuke's feelings.
37. How did Kensuke behave towards the narrator?
- (A) He was courteous but not warm.
 - (B) He was annoying and quarrelsome.
 - (C) He was optimistic and good-humoured.
 - (D) He was disappointed but not despairing.
38. The words 'We lived each of us in our separate cocoons' is an example of
- (A) a simile.
 - (B) alliteration.
 - (C) a metaphor.
 - (D) personification.
39. What did the narrator do while he was sitting on Watch Hill?
- (A) talk to Stella
 - (B) practise his apology
 - (C) observe the orang-utans
 - (D) hide away from Kensuke
40. Which word in the second paragraph indicates that the narrator regretted his actions?
- (A) 'wandered'
 - (B) 'distance'
 - (C) 'treachery'
 - (D) 'explained'
41. Why did Kensuke clap his hands when he saw Tomodachi?
- (A) to encourage her to go away
 - (B) to show her where Kikanbo was
 - (C) to warn the narrator to be careful
 - (D) to show that he was happy to see her
42. '... how they would often come to Kensuke when they were upset or frightened ...'.
- What can we learn about Kensuke from this statement?
- (A) He is kind and gentle.
 - (B) He is generous with food.
 - (C) He prefers the friendship of animals.
 - (D) He helps mothers find their lost babies.
43. Which two words in the text are SIMILAR in meaning?
- (A) 'civil' and 'polite'
 - (B) 'reproached' and 'grieved'
 - (C) 'reasoned' and 'convince'
 - (D) 'comfort' and 'upset'

BOOK REVIEWS

Pigeon Summer Ann Turnbull

Eleven-year-old Mary Dyer loves to spend every available moment with her father looking after their racing pigeons. She treats each bird as if it were family, and intuitively knows which ones to give special training attention to. She has great hopes for Speedwell, and believes that he will win the gruelling race from France to England and bring home some much-needed prize money.

Mary's father is forced to leave home in search of work in a distant town. While her dad's away, Mary knows what she has to do to keep the flock in peak condition but her mother needs her to spend more time helping with the endless household chores. As money and food become scarce, Mary's mother makes a decision that breaks Mary's heart. Too angry to face her mother, Mary takes a pigeon and storms out, not realising that a fierce tempest is about to hit. Mary must use all her skills and courage if she is to survive.

Set during the Depression in a coal-mining town in England, this is a simple but beautifully told story about childhood passions, hope, courage and love. An enjoyable read.

The Big Bazoohley

Written by Peter Carey

Illustrated by Stephen Michael King

This short book is Peter Carey's only children's novel. It's great to see it reprinted in a new edition with fantastic illustrations by Stephen Michael King. King has obviously enjoyed bringing his favourite scenes to life, and adds fresh appeal to the tale of Sam Kellow and his globetrotting parents. Sam's mother is a noted painter and his gambler father hopes to win the Big Bazoohley, an unimaginable payout that will set them up for life.

They arrive in Toronto to sell a painting to the mysterious Mr de Vere, but when he can't be found Sam takes it upon himself to help his family. One night he finds himself locked outside his hotel room in his pyjamas. He knocks on a number of doors until he is met by Muriel and George, who take him in and kidnap him to replace their own son, Wilfred, who was due to compete in the Perfecto Kiddo competition but has come down with chickenpox. Sam now has to string the would-be kidnappers along far enough so they give him the chance he wants—to win the Perfecto Kiddo competition and get the $10 000 prize money.

A lively story that moves at a cracking pace, this is a joy to read and would be a great book to share with younger readers at bedtime.
